AI Overview

Assigning a house using an institutional-housing index means matching people to housing based on their need level and past stay in public systems. This tool looks at health, age, and time spent in shelters, hospitals, or jails to find the right support level.

How the Index Works

- Measures Need: It scores how hard life is for a person on the street.
- Counts System Use: It checks how often a person uses jails, hospitals, or shelters.
- Finds Right Housing: High scores mean a person needs permanent supportive housing with full care. Low scores mean a person needs less help or affordable housing alone.

Pros and Cons

- Good Points:
  - Helps the sickest people first.
  - Stops the heavy use of costly public systems.
  - Makes housing choices fair and clear.
- Bad Points:
  - Scores can miss hidden trauma or quiet struggles.
  - Cities might lack enough homes for high scores.
  - Long wait lists can slow down real help.
